

Dylan

Many times through the years I had been told that I should get rid of Dylan and get a better horse that I could go further with in my career. My answer was that having Dylan and seeing him through his days was a part of the whole picture. If I could not accomplish my goals and bring Dylan along with me, then I would not do it at all. Since my early childhood until college, I was heavily involved with horses. After a two year break, acquiring Dylan brought me back into it. That was a good twenty years ago. Yes, my decision to see him through his days has definitely altered my path. However, there is no trade in the world worth the life value of keeping him.

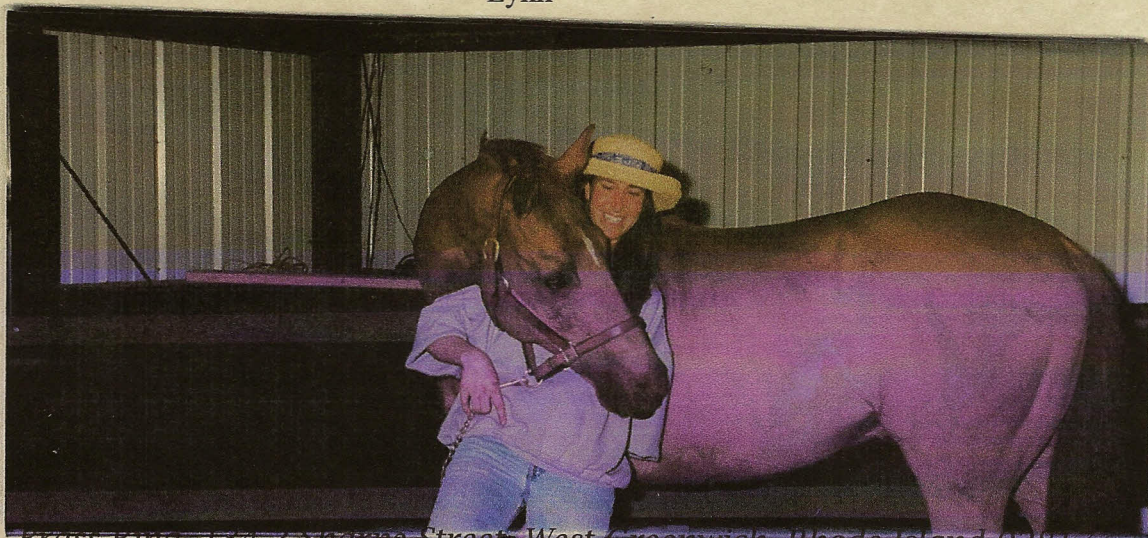

In fact, Dylan being part of my path has enriched the quality and authenticity of who I am and what I offer in my work with both horses and people. As modest as Brass Ring is, all of the creature comforts were built around and for Dylan. Here are a few characteristics his presence brought to so many people:

Loyalty, Tenacity, Patience, Courage, Dedication, Love, Duty, Work Ethic, Trust, Kindness, Responsibility, Empathy, Honor, Caring, Negotiation, Teamwork, Compassion, Pride, Commitment, Respect, Adoration, Discipline, Confidence, Appreciation, Success.

I've been blessed to keep my word to a good old friend. So, what, exactly is better than that? ☺

Thanks to all who helped and respected my decision to bring Dylan along with me and see him through his days.

Thank You Dylan, save a spot for me. Much Love,
Lynn
